Profile

Jared Solomon is an assistant vice president at Bose Public Affairs Group in Washington, D.C. He works with a variety of education-focused clients. Solomon's expertise includes education policy, student loans and related issues.

Prior to joining the firm, he worked as a legislative assistant in the office of U.S. Senator Robert P. Casey, where he acted as the senator's principal advisor on education, immigration policy and workforce development issues. He also worked on disability policy and issues relating to Medicaid. Solomon previously worked as the vice president of budget policy for First Focus, a national children's advocacy organization dedicated to making children and families a priority in federal policy. Solomon began his career as an educator, teaching social studies at Northwestern High School in Baltimore, Maryland, and working as a project coordinator for the chancellor of the District of Columbia Public Schools. Solomon also brings extensive campaign experience and is active in Maryland politics.

Education

Solomon is a 2009 graduate of Johns Hopkins School of Education, where he earned a master's degree in teaching. He holds a bachelor's degree in political science and history from the University of Pittsburgh.
