Profile

Roger Harvey is a principal with Bose Public Affairs Group and managing director of strategic communications. He also oversees strategic communications for Bose McKinney & Evans.

Harvey is a trusted advisor to executive leadership at leading corporations, governmental entities, industry associations, and non-profit organizations. He works with local, regional, national and international clients and has extensive experience in healthcare, energy, manufacturing, life sciences, retail, and economic development. His expertise includes crisis communications, public relations, media coaching, grassroots campaigns, alliance development and advocacy.

Prior to joining Bose Public Affairs Group, Harvey spent 18 years working in television news as an Emmy award-winning journalist. His news reports have been featured on MSNBC, CBS, CNN, and Court TV as well as network affiliates across the country.

Among his most memorable assignments, Harvey was one of the first journalists to report live using a satellite videophone from Camp Phoenix in Kabul, Afghanistan. He also covered Hurricane Katrina and the mission to rescue victims as the storm hit Mississippi. He reported from New York City within hours of the September 11 attack and was an anchor at the Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

Harvey is a frequent conference speaker discussing the latest trends in journalism and how to communicate effectively with the media.
